The League of California Cities® began in 1898 as a grassroots effort of a few city officials who instinctively understood that their cities would be stronger by joining forces and exchanging information. Looking back at the League’s efforts during 2016 it is clear that today’s city officials and League staff continue to embody the commitment to California city residents that brought those first California city officials together. Measuring the accomplishments of an organization as large and dynamic as the League can be challenging. With more than 98 percent of all California cities as members, the League carries out the priorities established by its officers, board of directors and leaders through state and federal legislative and legal advocacy, education and training. The numbers presented in the 2016 Annual Report showcase the remarkable breadth of work carried out by the League this year on behalf of its 475 member cities.
